Bail-out for British Banks Adapted from a Report by Ralph Gowling

BBC Internet News Friday 10th October

5 In recent days the world has been hit by an unprecedented wave of turmoil in the financial markets that is threatening the global economy with a crisis that is as bad as (or perhaps even worse than) the Crash of 1929. People are angry and rightly so. Many are posing the question of how such a catastrophic situation had not been anticipated and nipped in the bud much earlier, before it could spin so badly out of control.

In the wake of the global financial crisis, which is causing untold hardship and aggravation for millions of people worldwide, Gordon Brown, Britain's Prime Minister, said that other governments should follow Britain in putting money into struggling banks and offering guarantees worth hundreds of billions to persuade banks to start lending to each other.

10 "The stability and restructuring programme for Britain that we announced this week is the first to address at one and the same time the three essential components of a modern banking system -- sufficient liquidity, funding and capital," he said.

"But because this is a global problem, it requires a global solution."

15 Brown proposed that after this week's G7 and IMF meetings there should be a leaders' meeting in which we must lay down the principles and the new policies for restructuring our banking and financial system all around the globe."

He called for governments to adopt cross-border rules on transparency and the highest standards of conduct to guard against irresponsible risk-taking.

20 A new system of supervision should also be introduced to cope with the huge flows of capital between financial institutions, he said.

"The old solutions of yesterday will not serve us well for the challenges of today and tomorrow. So we must leave behind outworn dogmas and embrace new solutions," said Brown.

25 "So as we reform our financial system we should encourage hard work, effort, enterprise and responsible risk-taking -- qualities that markets need to ensure, so that the rewards that flow are seen to be fair," he said.

"But when risk-taking crosses the line between the responsible entrepreneurship which we want to celebrate and irresponsible risk-taking, then we have to take action to see that markets work in the public interest."

30 Brown said national systems of supervision were simply inadequate to cope with the huge cross-continental flows of capital in today's new, ever more interdependent world.

"I know that the largest financial institutions will welcome the proposed colleges of cross-border supervisors that should be introduced immediately," he said.

"The Financial Stability Forum and a reformed International Monetary Fund should play their part not just in crisis resolution but also in crisis prevention.

Shakespearean Theatre Possibly Found in London

Adapted from an article by Jennifer Quinn, Associated Press

Aug. 7, 2008

The theatre where "The Merchant of Venice" and "Romeo and Juliet" likely debuted and where William Shakespeare himself may have trodden the boards has probably been discovered in East London.

The foundations of what is as simply, The Theatre, were unearthedbuilders excavating the site of a vacant garage for another structure. London Museum archaeologists were called to theto make sure nothing was destroyed and had a "Eureka" moment! Archaeologists known for a long time that there was a high..... of The Theatre being on thissite but there are no maps that showlocation, no images to show what ithave looked like, and only a description of it.

"It's in the right , it's at the right angle to be a polygonal shape," said Jo Lyon, a senior archaeologist at the museum. "It's a pretty high possibility."

The discovery of The Theatre, built in 1576the set of open-air theatres where the Bard's plays were The Rose theatre's location was discovered in 1989 in Bankside just souththe River Thames in central London and the Globe theatre is nearby. A replica of the Globe was built on a siteto the original and opened in 1997.

"The first thing I want to know about it is what the foundations can tell us aboutarchitecture," Martin Wiggins a fellow at the Shakespeare Institute in Birmingham said. "How big was it? How does itwith the other theatres? " Wiggins believes that an understanding of what the theatre looked likehelp Shakespearean scholars understand more about this period in the playwright's history. "The size of the theatre will have an impact on the way the play is written" he said.

Lyon said it's unlikely The Theatre's complete foundationsever be fully excavated, but her team intendsexamine them further. Fittingly, a new theatre is being built on the site, ensuring the foundations below are protected.

Part 3 (20 marks)

Read the following text and identify and correct any mistakes in punctuation, spelling, grammar or lexis. Each line has one mistake. Underline the mistake and write the correction in the margin.

A recent pole set out to discover the top ten driving tunes favoured by motorists while driving their cars. Bohemian Rhapsody turned in to be the winner, written by a rock band Queen. This heads the list of similarly rousing numbers from the era of heavy rock music. Such ear- punching anthems have psychologists shaking their heads – not in time to the music but in dismay. This sort of music, they warn, can causing aggressive driving. Armies used to playing martial drums to stir their troops into battle and the effect works in traffic too. If you hear pounding music which make you want to drive forward, when all you can see is the back bumper of the car in front it is quite like to raise both your blood pressure and your frustration levels. In other words when you are out on the open road, fastly music is going to make you want to drive faster. Its also going to make you more aggressive and that’s probably going to mean that you’re tempted to make more risks.

These arguments are supported at earlier research which examined the performance of young people aged between 17 and 25. The report concluded that unsafe drivers in this aging group is more likely to go for up-tempo music with a heavy bass. There was also evidance that loud music played in a confined space, such as a car, could have the effect of blanking in the part of the brain witch performs logical reasoning.
